Today's issues important to all

Last week the oil and gas service industry spoke up. One hundred and thirty-two businessmen, managers, presidents and shareholders in Drayton Valley sent a letter of support to Premier Lougheed in his battle with Ottawa.

It was a rare show of unity for Drayton Valley businessmen. For this we say bravo. It is a matter of "breed and butter" to them, their feelings are naturally strong and their input is necessary to the decision-making process.

They argued, rightly we believe, for higher oil prices and a greater return on investment for oil producers.

And they are concerned, rightly, about recent estimates that hundreds of smaller oil producing firms are leaving Canada to invest in the United States where oil prices are approaching 80 per cent of the world price.

The benefit of higher oil prices and higher netbacks to the oil producing companies are self-evident: they would foster conservation of a precious resource, spur exploration and investment in Canada and create jobs, not only in Alberta, but across the nation.

The businessmen's motives may be different from ours, but what they advocate we agree with—up to a point.

What is rather alarming about their view is the extent to which they see Premier Lougheed as all good and Prime Minister Trudeau and the federal government as all bad.

The Liberals do occasionally make decisions, such as the approval of the "prebuilt" section of the Alaska gas pipeline, which are welcome in Alberta.

Talk of western Canadian separatism, north-south ties and using "chain saws" to cut off the country at the Manitoba border were part of the discussion. Loyalty to Canada, they say, is still there but it's being stifled.

They also believe the Feds should pull out of any involvement with the oil industry and disband Petro-Canada.

We acknowledge the Feds have pondered to the east a great deal too much. That is a game called politics. It's a game in which you have to appeal to the majority of people to get elected, unfortunately, at times, even contrary to common sense and good government.

But it's still the best system we have if we wish to remain a political entity on the global map. The federal government is the power broker making compromises and decisions—always alienating somebody—based on input from people and interest groups across the nation.

If we want to keep this plant nation of regions, we have to recognize this power, grant them the right to use it, even though the decisions are bound to hurt now and then.

Issues such as the promotion of Canadian-owned vs. foreign-owned companies, the manufacturing industry of Canada, the oil resources off the east coast and in the Arctic, the inflationary impact of too fast, too high oil price increases—are all matters of intense interest to ALL Canadians.

And as long as we will remain to keep this country called Canada, a government elected by all Canadians must have an important say in issues which affect us all.

After all the cover-up, the details and the minutiae, the civil servants involved have come out looking like heroes. Social Services Minister Bob Hoyle is standing innocent, and although many people would like to see his head roll, perhaps he's not so innocent after all. He's not so innocent after all. He's not so innocent after all.

I know this would be a broken record, but a major breakthrough of the Social Services department is long overdue. And it's up to the people of this province to spend a little less time reading these headlines and a little more time in the sports section or Ann Landers, and demanding what is rightfully theirs—an efficient human Social Services Department.

Canada needs prebuild pipeline

In an apparent policy reversal, the federal cabinet last week gave approval in principle to the construction of the Canadian section of the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline, which is expected to be the most expensive and controversial project in the history of the federal government.

But while the P.C. government was taking positive action with regard to this long-delayed pipeline, the Liberals were descending "on headlong commerce" in the building of the whole pipeline line, "with everything needed, signed and delivered." The agreement which was to have been in force for some time has now been put on hold.

Canada needs the activity that would be generated by the building of this section of the pipeline. The jobs and economic activity would revitalize the western Alberta and would be particularly beneficial in this recession year. Also and it's up to the people of this province to spend a little less time reading these headlines and a little more time in the sports section or Ann Landers, and demanding what is rightfully theirs—an efficient human Social Services Department.

The pipeline project is reportedly worth some $4.5 billion to Canada in one year but the GDP. It will create 250,000 man-years of employment which should improve the unemployment rate by one to one half of one per cent.

The Canadian section of the project, which may begin the construction within the next month and be completed in 1982, will generate $1.4 billion in direct capital expenditures in Alberta and provide 150,000 man-years of work.

Canada 17 billion over the next seven years.

Our party has been extremely pressing the government to approve of Canadian aspects of the prebuild section of the pipeline while the same time negotiating with the U.S. for a guarantee that the northern section of the line will go ahead as planned.

Until very recently, however, the Liberals have rejected these suggestions. Last December, the Progressive Conservative party approved the export of sufficient natural gas to the USA over several years to finance the prebuild section of the pipeline.

Dear Editor:

Caution needed with new authority

The County of Parkland is standing on the threshold of new power. If all goes according to plan, the county will be granted subdivision approving authority early in the new year, and with this authority will come an added responsibility.

With the subdivision approving authority, county councillors will be able to approve or reject any and all subdivision applications, a responsibility formerly granted the Edmonton Regional Planning Commission.

Unlike the ERPC, however, the councillors will not be able to seek safety in numbers from developers eager to push a lucrative proposal through the approval process.

County members must assure the residents of this county that the new power that will almost surely be bestowed upon them will not be used irresponsibly; they must assure the residents of this county that they will not kneel under to pressure from developers, pressures that will most certainly come, in one form or another.

With the subdivision approving authority, councillors will be able to more directly control future developments in the county. In the past, they have taken a strong role in that development, but the final say in regard to subdivision approval has lain with the combined forces of the Edmonton Regional Planning Commission.

With this authority, county councillors will be able to short-circuit the bureaucratic process, but we must also be sure they do not try to short-circuit the democratic process.

Councillors, with this new power, must ensure that they will endeavor to collect comments from as many people affected by a proposed subdivision as possible.

Fortunately, it appears that the county will make good on those endeavors.

In past years, the County of Parkland has enjoyed a reasonably good rapport with the various urban jurisdictions within its boundaries.

As an example, a joint planning committee comprised of members of the councils of Drayton Valley and the county has met on all occasions when an application for subdivision has concerned the town.

According to town officials, these meetings have served to establish a good working relationship between town and county officials, and it is hoped that this relationship will continue.

The ball for future development in the County of Parkland will soon be in the hands of our elected representatives.

We certainly hope they do not fumble that ball.

Buck Creek residents protest road repairs

Buck Creek residents are up in arms again over the condition of roads in the area, but this time they aren't complaining about what the County of Lethbridge does, but rather what the county has done.

On July 15, following an allegation by county residents, the roads in the area, in particular the Central Road from Buck Creek to Highway 22, were graded by county work crews, and last Friday, crews began laying gravel on the road.

The residents claim the road wasn't properly graded, and the graveling job is "just a waste of time."

"The job they did [graveling the road] is just disgusting, and a complete waste of time," Mrs. Isabelle Hunter said Friday.

"There are many holes still in the road that the gravel will just be thrown off to the side, and the first time we get a heavy rain, it will be just as bad as before," she added.

Earl Miller, another resident, said that the people in Buck Creek had been trying to get the road fixed properly, and had even had officials of the provincial department of transportation out to see the road.

"We've been pursuing this for quite a while now, and we've had all kinds of officials from the county and the province out, but what they are doing now is just a waste of money," he said.

Mr. Miller also said that he had spoken to Beverly Sam (Oshroff) and had been told that the graveling would be stopped.

Willy Hobbinger, public works superintendent for the County of Lethbridge, refused to comment on the issue, and said only that he had been instructed, by county council, to do the work as soon as possible.

Neither Beverly Oshroff nor Division 7 councillor Doug Smith, both away on holidays, were available for comment.

The father father adds he is angry about the issue of the government's confidentiality. "As a foster father I have a right to know what the child's background is."

"If I were to buy a parcel of land, I would have got more information on it than I just got from the government."

"The child has emotional problems that we can't handle, then he's far for us to look after him," adds the father.

Mr. Shirley Crisp says she does not believe the father will find social services Minister John Hughes.

"It is not possible for him to know what is going on as he is not in the picture," she explained.

The father father sent a letter July 2 to the social worker, Carol Robinson, asking for more information about his foster child and pointing out a number of discrepancies about what the social worker had told him before he had seen the child and after he had witnessed the child's behavior.

A copy of that letter was sent to Mr. Hughes and Mrs. Crisp, but Mrs. Crisp says the first time she talked to the father father was last week. She explained that she couldn't reach him.

But she also said she felt an investigation into the father father was necessary, but "whether this case warrants investigation is another matter."

Mrs. Crisp declined to comment further on the issue, saying she did not want to prejudice before she knew all the information.

New RCMP site decided this fall

A site for a possible new RCMP building will be chosen around mid-September, says an official of RCMP headquarters in Edmonton.

The site of the Property Management section of RCMP headquarters says the department has already received a list amounting to 10 possible sites for a new building.

The department will need officials to look at the possible sites during the third week of August, and then a recommendation will be submitted to head office.

The department has yet to commit itself to building a new RCMP building, but Mr. HBD has gone on record as saying that is a choice of a site is "practically definitive" and a likely profile to actual construction.

Utility will proceed with hamlet relocation

Calgary Power Ltd. has announced that plans to proceed with the relocation of the hamlet of Knapville, the company's largest hamlet, will include a new community hall, provision for a second road across, and replacement of the Knapville School. No PSS funds left for playschool

All Preventive Social Services (PSS) funds have been spent for 1980 and the Drayton Valley playschool society, which had planned for a subsidy, will have to seek funds from the community this year.

Mrs. Vicki Johnson, president of the society, says she has a number of lines on how to raise money for a playschool this fall.

"We might be approaching the parents to form a co-operative, I am in the process of applying to see number of charity organizations, and we will have to beg for the community," she says.

An estimated budget to establish and operate the school for this year would be around $20,000, says Mrs. Johnson.

At a public meeting which will be held within the next two weeks, the society could be asking parents to put $100 into a fund to cover some cost. "It parents want a pull out, they can have their money back," says Mrs. Johnson.

Because the school is not established this year, some sessions could not exceed $2.50 for a two and one-half hour period. Sessions will be offered twice a day for five days a week.

The $20,000 budget includes a qualified teacher and aide, says Mrs. Johnson. But it doesn't include capital costs, which will have to be funded from charity. "That could be a problem," she adds.

Mrs. Johnson says that the playschool society waited too long before getting established, which is the reason why it can't get PSS funds this year.

Most PSS funds are used up by July, says Mrs. Johnson, and some committees for PSS.

"There is no more money left for this year. We've spent funds to all the programs which Drayton Valley applied for, which was the Homekeepers program for seniors, and the director's office," says Mrs. Johnson. She adds that if the society cannot get enough support from the parents or the community, they will have to run a much smaller school this fall. "I'm doing everything I can to offer something for the children," she says.

Everything depends on whether people will agree to pay more for playschool. "They like to be subsidized, but it just isn't possible this year," she says.

Court briefs

Local man fined for driving charges

A Drayton Valley man was fined a total of $600 in court last Tuesday arising from charges of driving with an insurance and misuse of dealer's license plates.

Richard Ayotte, 25, appeared in court without a lawyer and did not go on the witness stand to give evidence.

After the judge asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was passed, Mr. Ayotte told the court that his insurance was covered by the company, which was why he had no insurance himself.

Mr. Ayotte pleaded guilty to misuse of dealer's plates.

Judge M. McInerney said that Ayotte's statement about his insurance could not be heard because it was mentioned too late to be used as evidence.

Mr. Ayotte was fined $400 for having no insurance, the minimum amount a judge is allowed to award on the charge, and fined $200 in misuse of dealer's plates.

Sentence on the two charges of break and enter and a stolen vehicle will be heard on August 12.

A charge of impaired driving against Harold Hansen of Drayton Valley was dismissed in provincial court last Tuesday on the strength of a technicality.

At the RCMP detachment on April 16 after the breathalyzer test was conducted, Mr. Hansen was served two certificates of analysis and Sgt. Thomas Simpson testified that they were true carbon copies of the original. Defence lawyer for Mr. Hansen proved that one of the documents, which says the chemicals used in the breathalyzer are true specimens, was not a carbon copy, but an original copy.

On the basis that Sgt. Simpson, giving testimony, made a mistake in saying that he handed the second a copy of the original, the rest of his testimony lost credibility and the case was dismissed.

However, the Crown may be considering appealing the case, says Cpl. Ron Worthington of Drayton Valley RCMP.

A 16-year-old Drayton Valley man pleaded guilty to charges of a stolen vehicle and break and enter and theft and not guilty to charges of stealing gas containers and a truck in provincial court last Tuesday.

Judge M. McInerney asked for a pre-sentence report from probation officer Mike Wierbach before passing sentence on the two charges which David Perry of Drayton Valley pleaded guilty to.

Mr. Perry pleaded guilty to charges of stealing a truck from Pomona Pipeline on June 25, and of stealing gas containers worth less than $200 on July 21. The trial concerning these two charges will be held on September 2. The Crown prosecutor told the court that Mr. Perry had no previous record, and when apprehended by police on July 21, he was co-operative in the investigations. Mr. Perry was apprehended by Drayton police after he and a female had "stayed" a car in the Drayton Valley area and had driven it into a ditch on the highway to Edmonton. The two men were arrested by RCMP.

The Crown added that concerning the charge of break and enter in the bus depot which occurred between June 1 and June 30, only a small amount of cigarettes and confectionery were stolen.

A total of 28 alcohol and seven drug related charges were heard in provincial court last week. The following people pleaded guilty and were charged accordingly.

Peter Tumbach, 21, of Drayton Valley, was fined $800 and suspended for an additional 12 months of driving after being charged with driving while his license was suspended. Mr. Tumbach was discovered driving a motorcycle in an alley. He was also fined $100 for possession of cannabis.

Joseph Jurek, 16, of Drayton Valley, was fined $100 for possession of cannabis.

Howard O. Boop, 26, of Edmonton, was fined $800 and has his license suspended for at least 12 months, for an impaired driving conviction. Mr. O'Boop had a previous conviction on the same offence in 1976.

Atsuro In the Drayton Valley area who wants to have their property or identified should contact the RCMP detachment at 542-4485.

Paul MacMillan, 16, of Drayton Valley, was fined $400 and had his license suspended for at least six months for an impaired driving conviction.

Justin Gordon, 21, of Drayton Valley, was fined $800 and had his license suspended for at least six months for an impaired driving conviction.

An Elford man was fined $100 for growing 38 marijuana plants outside his front doorstep.

Charles Beer, 25, pleaded guilty to the charge. Another charge of possession of cannabis resin was dropped by the crown.

On July 8, Drayton Valley RCMP searched Mr. Beer's residence and found the 38 three-inch plants and two bags containing stems and seeds.

The crown told the court the bags contained 7% of the resin, but it was unable to establish the amount of cannabis in the two plants.

Two similar charges against Donald Johnson, 35, of the same address, were dropped.

ID program for town residents

A Crime Prevention Unit, which will be available July 30 to mark and identify property in case of theft or loss, is a service available from the RCMP detachment, also free of charge. Drayton Valley residents who wish to have their property marked or identified should contact the RCMP detachment at 542-4485.

Drayton Valley residents who wish to have their property marked or identified should contact the RCMP detachment at 542-4485.

Rental program explored

The Town of Drayton Valley is exploring a rental program in a program of Alberta Housing Corporation which includes rental fees for low income families.

"It's absolutely exploratory at this stage," town manager Bill Johnson said at their last meeting.

The program is financed and developed by Alberta Housing and subsidized by the three levels of government. The town's subsidy amounts to 10 per cent of the total cost, however, said Mr. Johnson, at the last meeting "there is legislation in the wind whereby municipalities would be freed of this 10 per cent."

The town council has been considering the Alberta Housing program for the year but is not aware of how many local citizens are interested in the program.

Under the program, single family dwellings, duplexes, fourplexes, townhouses and apartments are eligible for the subsidy. After the program is launched a Local Housing Authority would be formed of local citizens to handle day-to-day adminis-

Writers in sinking boat

I want to be Albert's Authors Day on July 19, 1980. Really, I have some fun as I can come as I want, writers only, and I want only to reach someone's hearts and hands. I'd like to see my own names in the paper, but I don't want to be a writer.

Prof. of Myra Keston, author of "A B of Baby's Children," finally admits that the only way I could possibly have a chance of getting into the Children's Day is to be a writer and make friends with the Children's staff. She described her writing technique. The tapes themselves, then, transcribe the tapes into words, she said, and finally write them down. The tapes are made. The book took three years—45 years of research and much of actual writing, she said. Myra had just to do the tape in her picture above her book column in the Edmonton Journal, only her hair was up, not down.

After Myra, we had a panel discussion to Helen J. Carver, author of the Edmonton Star, Wendy Keston, author for the Edmonton Journal, and Viki Kellogg, author of the Edmonton Journal. We had a panel discussion to Helen J. Carver, author of the Edmonton Star, Wendy Keston, author for the Edmonton Journal, and Viki Kellogg, author of the Edmonton Journal.

As for reporting, we were told that daily newspaper reporters tend to have a high degree of objectivity, and above all, the tendency of their job and must be reported at 20 to the minute. That is, they are not to be late. We were told that most daily newspaper reporters work at 20 to the minute. That is, they are not to be late.

Myra told us that she serves the local community and one stage we read to us in the house community and D.A. reports, she understood that we were very happy. All this was all I had to do. I was told that we were very happy. All this was all I had to do.

house, and wondered, Will I ever see it in print? Probably not, that is, unless the writing comes through.

The also told us of the writer who typed and a previous book editor, changing only a bit and gave it a previous writer's name, and got 15 rejections. If he writes it now, he would have an unpublished novel in his drawer.

But now we were talking to her, I realized most of my writers are done to the time I live in and some established writers are having a struggle. Marie Farnham wrote to a letter.

After supper our topics were raised. Lucille Boudreau from CBC and Anthology will be having work until August 15. They actually have extended their deadline by a month, and they want fiction and poetry that we can read about. They pay well.

Unifarm letter urges change in federal law

In a letter to Prime Minister Trudeau, Uniform president Howard Falkenberg has urged the amendment of the National Energy Board Act to give the immediate attention of the House of Commons.

With passage of approval from the Western portion of the northern

Mr. Falkenberg said he is very concerned that the rights of agricultural producers are being neglected

In the haste to move additional supply of petroleum fuel.

Uniform, he said, has been disappointed to find there is no opposition by the Progressive Conservatives who would also agree to three readings in one day in order to ease the burden on the House of Commons.

He said the bill is well composed and (unusually) not after the usual "committee" process has been played out. It is a computer's idea, he said, from three to five jobs, and is ready to use.

Apartment - retail complex planned

An Edmonton-based firm, Frontier Land Company, is in the process of buying Dodson Plaza in Drayton Valley and is planning an addition to the shopping centre as well as a 250-unit apartment complex.

The land this is still registered under the original owner, P & H Holdings, who entered into negotiations to sell the site to Albion Clinic nearly a year and a half ago.

Albion Clinic is now in receivership and Frontier Land Company is in the process of purchasing the Dodson Plaza site.

Mr. Partridge, the architect for the proposed addition to the shopping centre, declined to reveal the cost of either the proposed development or the purchase price being offered by Frontier Land Company.

According to a design plan discussed by the town's Municipal Planning Commission last week, the proposed blocks would be a two-level structure with a parking garage underneath and a low-level building for retail use.

The building complex would include a parking area also to 12.5 to allow the resident development and a parking lot to allow the commercial expansion of the site.

Mr. Partridge of R.D. Lane Architects, in his letter to the town development officer, requested a rezoning of a portion of the 4.58 acre site to R-2 to allow the resident development and a parking lot to allow the commercial expansion of the site.

The addition to the Dodson Plaza would be 16,278 square metres extending east from 10th Street.

The design is still very preliminary, says the architect, Mr. Partridge, who estimates construction, if all goes well, could begin in a year's time.

However, according to discussions at the Municipal Planning Commission meeting, it may not go well. Objectives are expected to be met by the high-level building, but the low-level building is expected to be a problem.

Other concerns are expected to be met by the high-level building, but the low-level building is expected to be a problem.

for a subdivision of the site into two distinct lots before allowing two different tenants.

The commission decided to table the request pending approval by the town council of a new land-use bylaw which would not build on minimum density allowed in different sections. The commission also decided to send a list of concerns to the architect including possible access problems, too high density and traffic problems.

Who is that masked man?

Isn't it funny what members of the local community do in their free time. There's Cpl. Adam Zahner of the Drayton Valley RCMP doing his thing about "theory," a 21st-hour last day. Cpl. Zahner was part of the RCMP's "Fire Department team that dropped a close decision to a team of citizens in Monday night's hockey league game. Story, more photos, Page 2 of Recreation section.

Leaders want funds for boom towns

By Mike Chartrand
Leaders of three of Alberta's political parties agree that a commitment must be made in the last election five per cent of all government revenue gathered from natural resource development would be put into a special fund to meet the "unique circumstances" of resource towns.

There's no question," he said, "Drayton Valley over a period of many years has been a boom town, and we're in power, has certainly failed to get the attention it should have."

Drayton Valley needs special funding because of all the oil development in the region and because of the "unique timber potential" in the area as well, he added.

Mr. Clark, who will be running as leader of the Social Party this year, said bureaucrats in government are too cautious and are afraid of spending too much for infrastructure development before growth takes place.

And as a result, roads are not built strong enough and sewage systems and water reservoirs don't last long enough and have to be rebuilt. "When a town cannot live hand-to-mouth, it tends to make short-term decisions only," he said.

It would be a good long-term investment, Mr. Clark suggested, to develop infrastructure funds before growth in the towns starts, to rebuild them later.
